Salad Densing for Bottling.

Take the yolks of 2 fresh raw egg, put them in a basin with a tablespoontial of selt, and whisk them well up. Do not spare labour: the success of the dressing will largely depend upon your spanding plenty of time over it, for in that way alone can you give the amount of gradual mixing and beat, ing it requires. Having thoroughly whicked up the yolks and salt, take a pint of the best Florence sald oil, and slowly add a very little of the oil at a time, thoroughly mixing and beating the egg yolks with it before you add a little more, and so go an until all the oil has been completely blended and amalgamated with the eggs and salt. When that is done, in the same gradual and thorough manner carefully mix and beat in by degrees. I tablespoonful of mustard that has been blended first emoothly with a little water, and also by degrees, little by little at a time and $2 table. has been blended first smoothly with has been blended first smoothly with a little water, and also by degrees, little by little at a time, add 3 table-speonfuls of ordinary good vinegar, I tablespoonful of tarragon vinegar, and I desertispoonful of elder vinegar. Next add a teaspoonful of finely-sifted white sugar and a little cayenne. When all the ingredients are completely mixed and blended the dressing is ready for bottling.

—I am saked how to make this for covering purposes so that it may sometimes be folded up. I am also asked how to make it so that it can be stratched over a frame of wicker work to be used as a coracle or other easily carried boat. Saileloth or strong canves are the best materials to work upon. Grind 6lb. of English cehre with boiled oil, and add Ilb. of black paint. The mixture so made will not look a very good black, but that you must not heed. To the mixture add los. of yellow song dissolved by heat in i pint of water and mixed with the paint while hot. The mixture should be applied to the dry canves as stiff as you can conveniently do it with the brush, allow it to dry for 2 days, and then law an account of the hot. he has brush, allow it to dry for 2 days, and then lay on a second coat of the ochre and black paint without any scap; give this full time to dry, them brush it over with pure black paint or any other colour you please, and in 3 or 4 days you may fold it up without its sticking together, or you may stretch it over the frame to turn it into a heat.

RED CURRANT, STRAWERRY, AND RANDERSY JAK are all made the same way, but the different fruits take different itmes to boil. Many most successful jam boiling housekeepers always allow lib. of sugar to every lib. of fruit, and abide by the rule that from the time the jam begins to boil red currents should be continued boiling for 10 minutes, strawberries 30 minutes, and then removed and crocked. With a view to keeping jams, the first matter of importance is to gather the fruit in dry weather, use it while perfectly fresh, rejecting any berry bruised, injured, or in the least decayed. An bless important factor towards success is to have the jam crocks or glass jars not only perfectly clean, but sleo perfectly dry; if there is the least dampness left in the crocks the jam, no matter how well or carefully made, is sure to turn mouldy; therefore always wash the crocks the day before you boil the jam, wipe them dry, and, on the morning you are going to use them, put them before the fire so that every atom of damp may be got rid of. Perfectly good keeping jams can be made by allowing fib. of loaf sugar to every 1lb. of fruit, weighed after it has been picked from the stalks. Use for boiling either a bright copper or an enamalled preserving pan, put the fruit in this, and set it on the hot plate or the fire, have the sugar crushed and ready, but cook the fruit first gently alone until it is hot through and the juice begins to run, then gradually add the time; when it comes to the boil let it remain boiling for half an hour, then try if it will set by putting a few drops on a cold plate and testing in this, way is agon.

Listening to the superb performance of "Tristan und Isolde," on Friday night, one could not fail to remember it be promise of the late Sir A. Harris, given at the close of last season, when he said that Wagner's great work should be "nung and not bawled," for Jean de Resste would appear as Tristan, and the impressario undertook to give his patrons a musical and an intellectual treat. That promise has now been amply fallied, while he who made it already lay dead. Such thoughts as these must have filled the minds of many as they listened to the mater's passionate music, rendered as it has never been before in this country, and none could fail to remember the one who had made this and much more possible on the stage of Covent Garden. The American comedian as Fitzalierton Scrougs, the theatrical manager, the stage of the composition of the com must be confessed it was by no means a success. Possibly, when the new comer has somewhat modified his style, he will be found a real acquisition to the ranks of the comedians. At present he is too restess and too ready to "take the stage" on the slightest procestion. That he can be amusing to a degree was most evidenced on his first centry, when he extracted so much fun out of a syphon of soda-water as to k make one forget that all that sort of a thing was done years ago. The fact is, that ever since they assumed office they very magnitude of their own trimph at the policy. The provided in the prompt despatch of subseme meaning officer wants much more back to Parliament a Government supported by an almost unprecedented majority, faced by a numerically insignificant and morally dispirited and disorganised Opposition. Two results have followed from that condition of parties. In the first place, the Government are portered throughout the country, with that object they loaded the Queen's Speech with more promises of legislation than they could possibly perform, and, with respect to the education question in particular, they tried so hard to please everybody that they ultimately succeeded in pleasing no body. This extreme conscientiousness in redeeming their election pleages has been followed by an equally scrupulous regard for the promise not to prolong the assession beyond the middle of August. Ministers have, in fact, been to conscientiousness in redeeming their election pleages has been followed by an equally scrupulous regard for the promise not to prolong the assession beyond the middle of August. Ministers have, in fact, been to conscientiousness in redeeming their election pleages has been followed by an equally scrupulous regard for the promise not to prolong the assession beyond the middle of August. Ministers have, in fact, been to conscientious towards the middle of the majority is, naturally, stronger as the minority is weaker. Forgetful of the fact that it was white men who delivered them from destruction at the hands of the Matabele, the natives of Mashonaland have risen in revolt, and are now murdering and pillaging the white settlers in all directions. Savages can rarely resist the temptation to fight and loot when a chance is offered them, and the Mashona are only behaving according to their kind. They are, besides, acting with the greatest determination; the insurrection has spread with lightning rapidity; and now we find the small garrisons of Fort Salisbury and Fort Charter shut up in lasger and utterly powerless to afford the slightest assistance to the scattered settlers, who are being butchered by the blacks. Sir Frederick Carrington, who has certainly not got more troops at his disposal than are sufficient to complete the suppression of the revolt in Matabeleland, has, nevertheless, pushed forward all the soldiers he can approach the forward all the soldiers he can be seen the first of the same of the seed of t
